To O/A:
 To my favorite
~~girl~~ girl-friend.
 You are the answer
 to my dreams,

 to me, Peace,
 ERIC

We always hear about how bad the younger generation was. How we tore up campuses with our protesting and ran to Canada to avoid the draft. About our immorality, living in communes, getting high on drugs, burning draft cards, setting bombs. How we turned against God, and our country, and our society, and each other...

We heard about our long hair, our love beads, blasting our eardrums out with our music - our constant battle against the political system and our rebellion against the school system.

We made posters proclaiming "make love, not war", and then we hated because of skin color, creed, religion ...

We lived in filth, read dirty books, went to dirty movies, and thought dirty thoughts.

This was the younger generation's way of life - and great as it may have been, we missed it. While all of this was going on, we were just old enough to read and hear about it. Now that we're old enough to be involved, it has passed us by.

Top Left: Oklahoma City firemen save a portable classroom which broke out in a blazing fire. Below Left: For the pollution of the mind, one might try an X-rated movie. Left: At the end of the day after students are gone litter is all that is left.

So we've had to do something new for our generation—the government, we have the 18-year old vote to be a part joining forces to clean up the environment.

Even though I don't know you.
Good luck & have a nice summer. God bless you!
Love, in Christ
Kathy

After almost two decades of war, 1972 began to shine with bright hopes as American troops began withdrawal from Vietnam. The reality of complete withdrawal was still a question mark, but as more and more men came home, hope was restored.

While fighting was still going on in Vietnam, more fighting broke out but of a different nature. The 1972 Summer Olympics brought tragedy, and the unity and peace of the games was almost destroyed at the Arab terrorist killings of eleven Israeli Olympians.

The games continued, however, with the hope that peace and unity were still a possibility.

People gather; hear the Word

As young people make an effort to make a change in their future, fads come and go, movements and revolutions take place, and the cry for change is constantly heard.

Changes come swiftly, make their mark and fade. As young people look for a lasting solution, more and more are turning to religion. The rapidly growing "Jesus Movement" has caused a change in attitude toward religion and the number of people involved. Cries of "One Way" were heard from nearly one million participants as Explo '72 made its mark as the largest religious revival of its time.

At home, maybe the noise wasn't quite so loud, but the mood was certainly there. Religious groups were formed so that various opinions could be heard. And maybe if the mood wasn't felt by all young people, the acceptance or rejection of religion was vividly apparent.

Opp. Page: For these people a time of reflection is used reverently at their church. Below: "One Way" is the message the participants of Explo '72 are trying to say as the entire crowd joins in to express their faith. Top: Young Life leaders lead a lively crowd at a Young Life meeting in one of their popular songs "Jaybird."

Students strive for better world

Poverty breeds poverty. It traps generations into an environment that is full of filth and disease. Money alone cannot break this cycle. It takes people who really care and are willing to do something about the problem.

Many laws have been put into effect to improve these conditions. The food stamp program, the housing projects, and such organizations as the Salvation Army and Goodwill Industries are trying to make this a better world.

The welfare program is not only a nationwide project, but the schools are also getting involved. Students have tried to be more than just observers. They involved themselves through individual awareness and school organizations. Along with collecting for United Appeal and the traditional Toys for Tots, students helped others less fortunate. Student Body Council president Bobby Eskridge said:

"Student Council has a warmer feeling than some students seem to think. When Toys for Tots rolled around again this year, the entire Council was excited to help out and fully support the drive. In this enthusiasm lies a certain feeling the Council has for helping the less fortunate.

Every year, new ideas emerge because of medical research. Twenty or thirty years ago, venereal disease was considered a "hush-hush" subject. Polite people did not discuss it in public, but finally people began to realize that the only way to conquer the disease was through presenting the problem to the public.

Medical researchers have been able to find out and research this and other diseases prevalent in our nation.

By use of animals, technicians are able to experiment with new drugs before using them on humans.

With the widespread use of drugs among all ages, medical research is working overtime to help addicts.

Cancer is another dangerous disease that medical researchers are trying to cure. One senior student said:

"With all the cures they have come up with for various types of diseases, surely they will be able to find one for cancer. I only hope that they find it soon!"

Elections attract student interest

In the school year '72-'73, many local and national political events took place. The recent 18-year-old vote amendment, ratified by the Oklahoma legislature early in 1972, showed its force in a Presidential election that also included local and Congressional races. Several city official elections took place with many ending in runoffs; and several state questions and millage levies had to be voted upon.

Students who gained their newly-approved right began to show their support for men, women and parties through their time, effort and devotion. Although not as many students used their right to its fullest extent, "student vote" campaigners felt that their time and money was not wasted, as one group combined enjoyment with patriotism. Their Midnight Movies brought many voters and non-voters together to enjoy the finest motion pictures at a low price as they attempted to register those potential voters.

This was the year that McGovern forces thought they would be able to conquer the incumbent Richard Nixon by "controlling the student vote." Their dreams were not to be realized as election day rolled around to produce "four more years" for President Nixon.

Awareness week involves students

This year, being an election year, the presidential election was one of the year's big moments.

As the first presidential election in which the 18 year old vote was applied, the stress was on. All candidates were clamouring for the younger votes starting with the moment they registered.

Political Awareness Week was set up in October. Booths for each of the major candidates were furnished by interested students. Speakers were invited to JM each presenting all sides of the election and developing ideas for the students to become aware and interested in political affairs.

To highlight the week a mock election was held for the student body. With results in and Nixon winning, a startling number of students did not exercise their voting rights and many appeared apathetic. When asked about this, one student replied,

"With a student body of this size more should have found the time to vote. If this is the interest the young people show in their country, the future might hold trouble."

City supports "Save a Tree Week"

More students have become involved in the environment this year. One of the year's big projects was the city-wide paper drive.

One student commented:

"Students have come to notice that the beautiful world around them is rotting away in man's waste and corruption. Many small changes have been made in some ecology-minded students. Some have completely dropped their smoking habits. Others have quit the littering habit and encourage others to do the same.

Becoming aware of the beautiful outdoors which are becoming so rare, students now enjoy many types of activities such as biking, hiking, mountain climbing, skin diving and many more.

I'd encourage everyone to take a drive in the country and enjoy the world as it is."

City progresses: skyline changes

When the new Myriad Convention Center was completed in October, 1972, the grand opening started a wave of entertainment activities to be presented for years to come. The completion of the building ended the main part of the urban renewal project.

The Myriad can hold over 15,000 and proved its capacity when stars like Charley Pride and Neil Young came to town. Five years ago the Myriad was only a dream in the hearts and minds of a few men, but in 1973 that dream was a beautifully finished building.

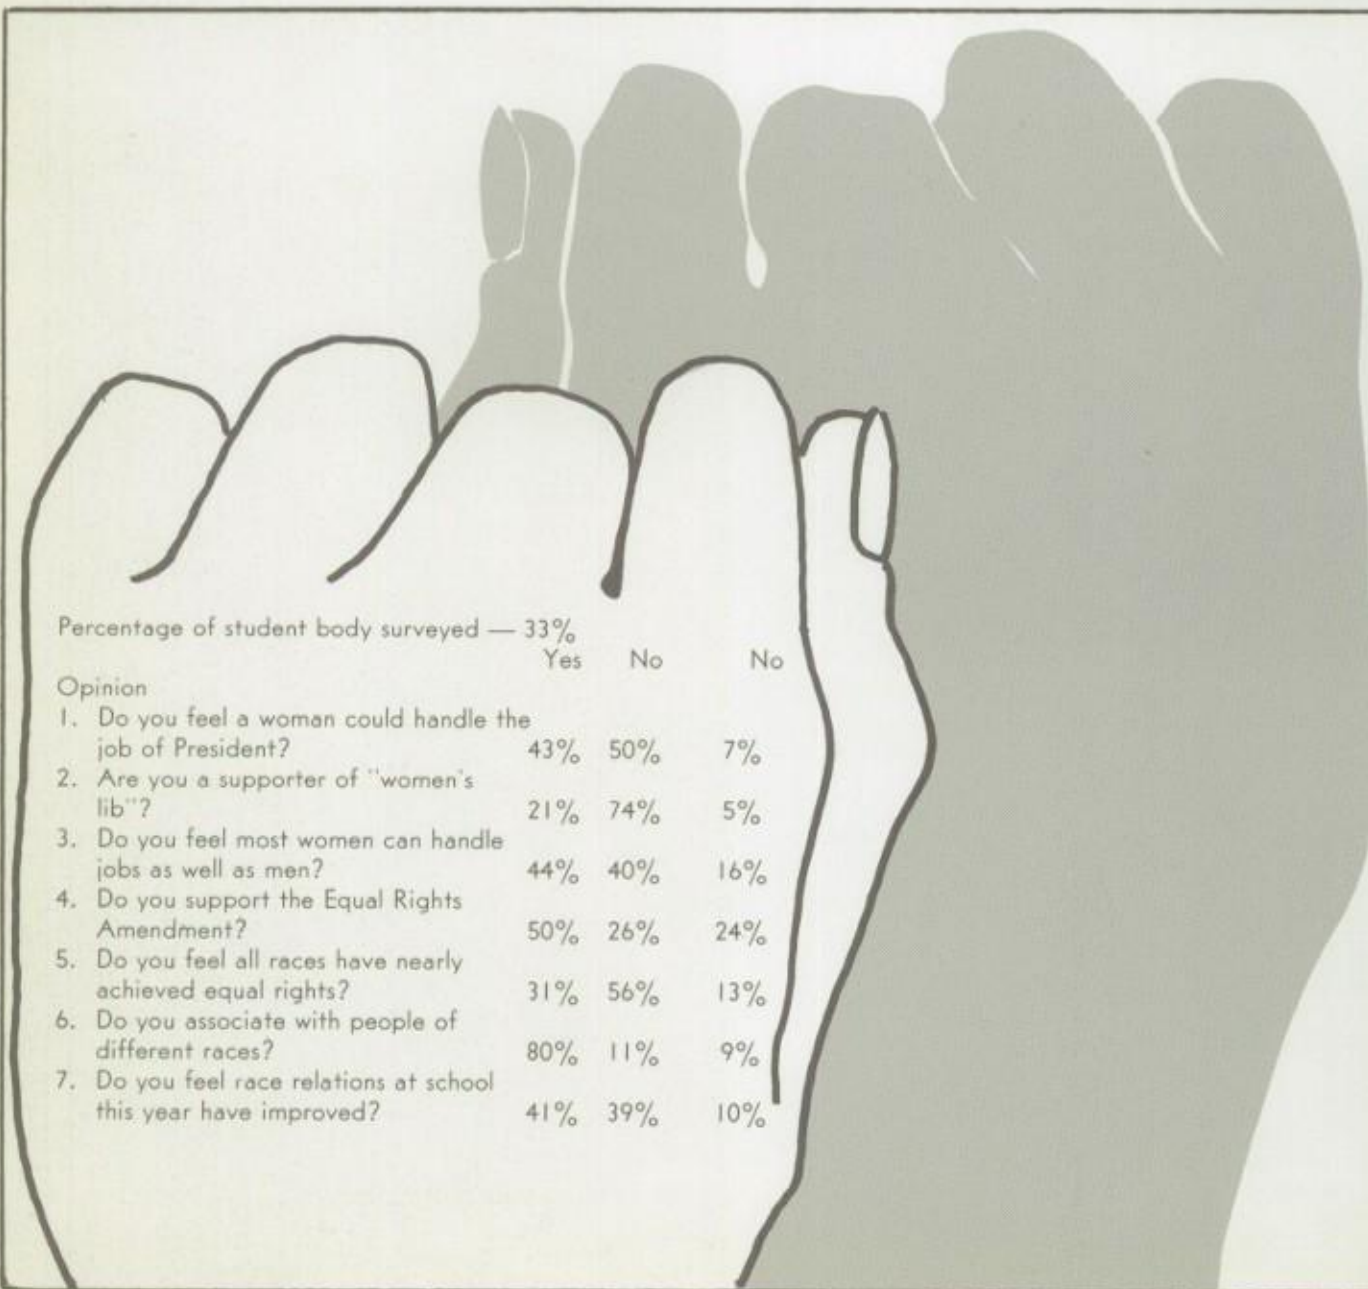

Another dream that took up much space in the thoughts of men ten years ago was the idea of men landing and exploring the moon. December 7-19 will be a historic date for America, for that week in 1972 saw the last of the Apollo missions go to the moon on the most perfect and extensive expedition of all. Apollo 17 was the end of an era of space exploration, and the beginning of a new era of space exploration which will see space stations and space shuttles.

Opinions voiced on equal rights

The cry for equal rights was heard louder than ever as many women joined together in pushing the Equal Rights Amendment. The pros and cons were obvious and debates were constantly heard concerning the issue. The ERA was to come before the Oklahoma State Legislature for ratification in 1973. In order for the amendment to pass, it must be ratified by 2/3 of the states.

Those against the amendment felt the future of women, the family and the nation would be in the hands of the court to determine what "equality" is. They feared a unisex society.

Others felt it was indeed time for a change where women would be treated as equals. The draft was to be included with the possibility of all women registering at 18. Various male and female opinions, various ideas and criticisms were heard.

Junior Kelley Mitchell said:

"Regardless of how many laws are passed, no enforcement can change prejudice. Until people, including women, accept the fact that men and women are equals, this amendment might hinder rather than help women in their fight."

From a boy's point of view, Paul Belflower had this to say about the topic:

"If the majority of the women in America felt that they could abide by all the provisions of the amendment, I would have no objections to the state legislatures ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment."

Students' time use constructive

Crime and juvenile delinquency were once again alien to the environment at JM. While it touched the lives of some, most students had more useful ways to spend their time.

Finding a part time job proved to be a problem for some John Marshall students, but most held jobs. Those that were ambitious enough to go out and find a job had trouble locating one that would give them the experience they might find valuable in later years.

One student who was fortunate enough to find a job had this to say:

"As a salesworker in a leading department store I have learned to communicate better with the public. I realize that the job I am holding now may never help me in my career, but for the meantime, I am learning how important it is to work and get along with others."

The year was not marked by an excessive amount of violence. With less unrest in the cities, there seemed to be no major crime problem. Shoplifting continued to be the major crime among teenagers, and the Marshall community was probably involved to some extent. As the year passed, more and more dispute arose over the use of capital punishment.

Values change; freedom spreads

One of man's special traits is to ask thoughtful questions about what he should or should not do. He does not have to ask himself about breathing or digesting foods, but he does have to ask whether he should turn on with drugs, have premarital sex or participate in any other action which society does not consider proper.

People as a group have developed ideas and principles which individuals are expected to follow, and usually people have wished to live up to these standards; but the younger generation of today has developed its own type of morals.

They are not out to impress people with how much money they have or how important they are. They are mainly concerned with the natural, realistic things that they find in life. Junior Mary Jane Herndon has this to say about the subject, "We are all individuals, everyone is unique — we are all able to set up our own code of values according to what we think is right or wrong."

Casual Fashions Attract Bears

The stamp of individuality, that's what it's all about. Students at John Marshall try to prove this true by setting their own rules in fashion.

Some students enjoy casual clothes, mainly because of their comfort, but others feel that dressing up puts them in high spirits. Junior Barbara Boyce says:

"What shows up in next month's Seventeen will no doubt show up in stores and then on the girl who follows fashions. In the 40's it was waist pants and platform shoes. Now in the 70's, fashions are much the same. I have no doubt that what just went out of style will be back in style in any number of years. I think the girls in our school follow definite fashion patterns."

When asked what one girl liked best on boys at JM, the reply received was:

"'O' Club jackets."

As the high school years provide the advantage of meeting all types of people, it also gives the individual a chance to spend a part of his time dating. To some, dating could be considered doing things with a mixed group of people.

When a small portion of the student body was asked what kind of dating, if any at all, appealed to them, most had a strong opinion against steady dating.

One student felt like this:

"There is always the chance that someone will get hurt. Also, everyone has some activities they could become involved in during high school, and they shouldn't be tied down."

Reverse dating opinions vary; students object to going dutch

Top: Motorcycling, a major form of transportation and enjoyment, provides relaxation for Hal Nottingham and Anita Dooley. Above: A sunny afternoon is the perfect setting as freshmen Kathy McWain and David Wilkerson enjoy a public park.

High schoolers veto steady dating;

Although the majority of students were against the idea of steady dating, others had strong ideas for their opinions:

"Steady dating gives you a glimpse into the future as to what it will be like when you find someone's company you really enjoy."

As opinions and tastes varied greatly on dating, so did the individual ideas on what was enjoyed most on a date. Forty per cent of the students preferred a movie while a small percentage stated they would rather go to a dance.

One aspect of dating which has reached booming proportions in the past years is computer dating. When asked whether or not he believed in computer dating a freshman Dennis Goodwin replied:

"Personally, I wouldn't want to date a computer."

Whether or not it's the answer to finding a perfect mate, only 18% of the students surveyed believed in this type of dating.

The style of dating is altered for practically everyone according to his individual taste. Girl-ask-boy, blind dates and dutch dates were just a few of the ways people varied their dates.

Even with all of the changes people made in their style of dating, the student body was a place of mixed emotion on the subject of dating.

Out of the 33% of the student body surveyed, most said their favorite kinds of activities were rock concerts, hobbies, parties and just playing around. Opinions varied on Finger Plan

Again this year, Oklahoma City schools got a new integration plan. Two previous plans in as many years had had little effect, so the Finger Plan was set into effect. All were designed to achieve better racial balance.

In reaction to the plans, junior Leslie Friedlander replied:

"I think most people have the wrong idea about busing. They automatically think, 'I'm against it.' I'm for busing because I think it is the only way we can begin to integrate our schools until we learn to live with people of a different color. I really don't like people not being able to attend their neighborhood school, but I think learning to live with your brother is more important."

Mike Biswell replied that he thought it was:

"a Communist plot."

Conflicting opinions were some problem, but there were others. With money being spent for buses, school supplies were scarce. Freshmen were added to JM, making it a very crowded four-year school.

One aspect of the Finger integration plan was the changing of junior highs to middle schools and the adding of the ninth grade to high school. As one freshman put it,

"On to bigger and better things."

"At first I thought it would be real confusing for freshmen to go to John Marshall this year, but now that I'm here, it really isn't," one freshman commented.

The new plan was not finally okayed until early August, so the school year began with new teachers, new portables, new faces and tons of schedule changes.

Some students found their schedules contained no English or math class. A few girls were enrolled in boys' gym, and others were given four languages. These were only a few of the problems faced by the counselors.

As in years before, the parking lots were crowded, but this year so were the offices, the halls, the classrooms, lockers and nearly everywhere else students turned.

After weeks and weekends of schedule changes, most everyone was straightened out, and the rest of the year continued to run as smoothly as could be expected.

"Classes can really get boring if you listen to a teacher for an hour, but if you can go somewhere besides the classroom, it makes your day more interesting."

This is just one person's opinion on classroom procedure, but many students share his feelings.

The classrooms were overcrowded this year, and many classes had four grades in the class. One teacher said:

"I'm sure in some classes it doesn't make much difference, but in a discussion class it is sometimes difficult to combine the maturity levels of a freshman and senior and have an intelligent discussion."

When surveyed on whether the students felt they should have more to say about school dress codes, the majority of students replied they felt they didn't have enough freedom to wear what they want. Also, most of the students felt that the school should adopt a new grading system.

One method that was presented was the pass-fail system. Elaine Russell, a sophomore, said:

"I think the p-f system would work better because some students work equally if not harder than the ones who make a 4.0 average. Yet when the grades come out they feel like failures. Sometimes they are just as intelligent though their grades are lower."

Even though criticism was expressed through the year, few changes could be made in curriculum or grading, and education remained much the same.

Clubs to benefit career interests

The year was full of promise as the annual campaign to involve students in activities began.

Several new clubs were added, and older clubs worked to brighten their activities. It was indeed a year of variance concerning the amount of participation in various organizations. Most individuals were apathetic toward school clubs, and there were others who felt that the clubs had promised much but delivered little. Junior Dede Duncan expressed her disapproval:

"I think the Pep Clubs promised most but delivered the least because of the disorganization and general hysteria created by a bunch of screaming girls."

While some sharply criticized the clubs and their contributions, others felt that participation had increased, as senior Randy Stalcup explained:

"On the whole, I thought we had better participation this year in 'O' Club than we have had in a long time."

Individual ideas concerning school clubs were as varied as the ideas put forward to improve the various organizations.

Time outside of school was required to help in these campaigns, and students gave freely of their time.

Money-raising projects were a must as funds for many of these projects were small. Suckers, candles, perfume and stationery were sold to raise the needed funds.

As new clubs were being formed, new ideas and goals were initiated. Various clubs sought to achieve services outside the walls by JM by helping underprivileged children, needy families and the community.

Decision made; careers chosen

There are thousands of careers to choose from. They vary greatly in both type of work involved and the education and training required. Obtaining the proper information and making careful plans are important steps in reaching goals.

The students at JM are utilizing the classes they take as much as they possibly can. The classes they are now taking may be a very important step in deciding upon a career. Pay is also a factor to consider.

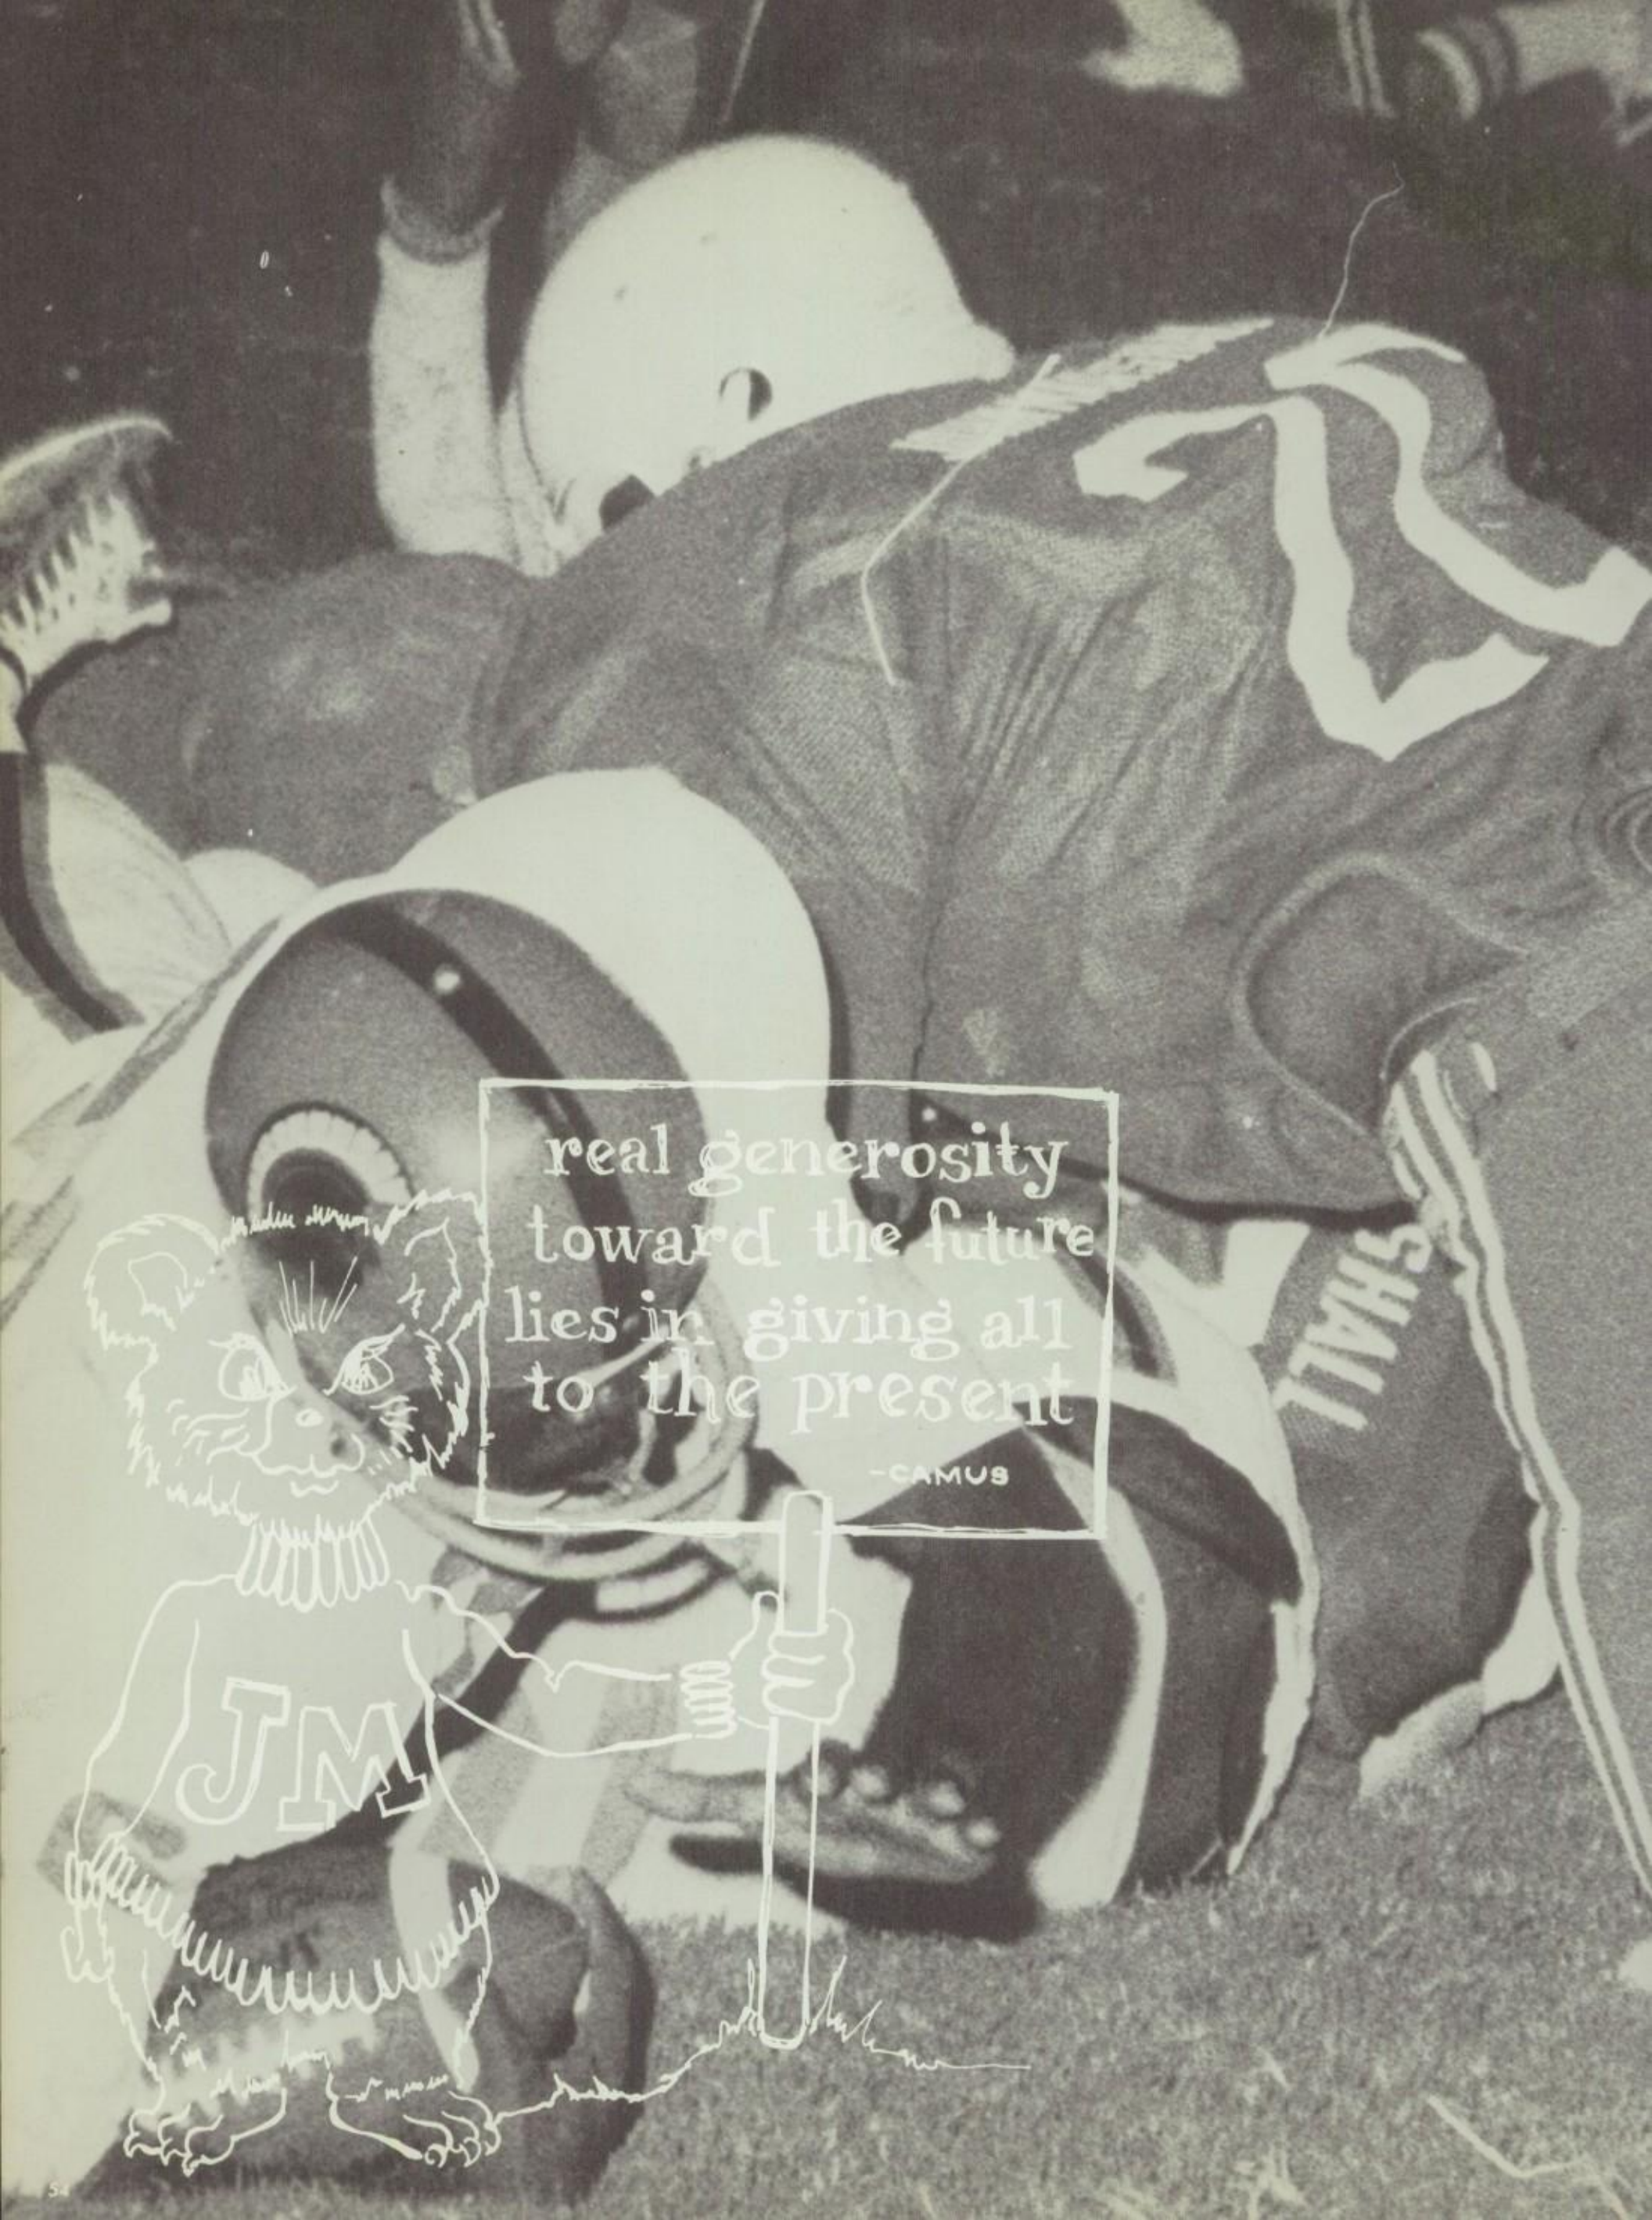

A student may want to hold two jobs so he will be able to compare the two before deciding on one. Most people with stable careers have completed some type of specialized education in college or trade school. Senior Patti Parish replied,

"After talking to several pharmacists, I became interested in a pre-medical career. Pharmacy seems like a career that would be challenging in its own way. There are always new doors open in the field of medicine, which depend on the knowledge of a well skilled pharmacist."

Cross Country has building year

The Bear's Cross Country season was termed a building year by Coach Foster Harrington. There were only three seniors on the team this year. Injuries kept the team from being outstanding.

The Bear victories came with a dual victory over Casady and triangular meet victory over Midwest City and U.S. Grant. Despite the determination of the young team, they did not fare as well in other duals and meets.

They came in 6th in the Del City Invitational, 4th in the Mid-State Tournament and 18th in the State Tournament.

Lettermen for the team were Brent Schooley, Steve Milks, Kevin Murphy, Mark Stillwell, Ronny Johnson, Jim Austin and Robert Countryman. These runners had to be in at least $\frac{2}{3}$ of the varsity meets to letter.

On the average, each man ran five miles each day to prepare for the meets. One of the best cross country men in the state and nation was Schooley. He took first place in the AAU regional qualifying tournament and third in the national meet held in Buffalo, New York.

Gridders finish season at 4-5-1

It is hard to look at the John Marshall 1972-73 football season as a losing one, even though the record was 4-5-1.

The Bears tasted defeat right off the bat. The loss came at the hands of the Northeast Vikings 19-18. JM held a 12-7 halftime edge. At the opening of the third stanza, Marshall added 6 more. The fourth quarter belonged solely to NE, as they scored the necessary 12 points needed for the victory.

Marshall's next loss was probably hardest for Bear fans to accept. This loss was delivered by Del City 3-0. The Eagles came into the game with an 0-3-0 record. They had had a total of 73 points scored against them and left the game with a total of 3 points on the season. Those three points were enough to give them a victory over JM.

Homecoming sees Northwest win

Three losses followed, one a week later in the Homecoming game against Northwest 19-14. It was a hard-fought game, but the Bears just couldn't "get it together."

The last two losses came in the last two games. The first was to Midwest City 20-6 with the Bombers scoring twice in the last 11½ minutes.

The last lost was to Putnam West 9-7. A field goal with 16 seconds left on the clock gave the Patriots a victory.

The "winning" end of the season started with Putnam City. The second game of the season saw JM and the Pirates fighting to a 14-14 tie. JM had more penetrations, and if the two teams had tied for a conference championship, this would have been significant.

Bear victories dispute rankings

The second win game a week after the Putnam City game when Marshall, sparked by Mike Duvall, smashed the Douglass Trojans 29-12.

October 13, the Bears put it together as they slipped past No. 2-ranked Moore 9-7. It was a 32-yard field goal in the third quarter that made the difference.

Marshall then shut out Classen 15-0. It was a show of awesome defense by the Bear squad.

At this point in the season, JM's record had leveled off at 3-3-1. Marshall then faced No. 3-ranked Mid-State conference foe U. S. Grant. The Bears were ahead 15-0 after three quarters. Grant made a late surge, but fell short in the end as the final score was 15-14.

Receiving recognition from various sources for their season's play were Randy Stalcup, Phil Crook, Monty Priest, Paul Zimmer, Jim Hodges, Glen Stewart and Rod McDaniels.

Mat title won; five city champs

The 1972-73 wrestling season ended with the Putnam City Pirates winning state. It was a surprise, considering Norman was expected to run away with it, but the surprise team of the year was JM.

The Bears, who took third in State, had a relatively bad dual record, as they lost 7 and won 6.

Marshall won their first match against Putnam City West, however, they weren't so lucky a week later as they got thumped by Tulsa Memorial 32-14. Then the Bears slipped past Sand Springs 25-23, and lost to Del City.

Matmen capture sixth at Geary

Perry was the last dual before Christmas, and the Bears lost by a score of 30-18. The next time JM appeared on the mat was at the Geary tournament. The Bears placed 6th as they took one first place — Randy Stalcup at 168 lbs. David Cobb at 108 and Steve Rankin at 130 took fourth, and Rick Wightman at 157 took fifth.

January 9, Northwest forfeited to JM, and three days later the Bears downed U. S. Grant 32-18. Following this win they dropped three straight, the first to Putnam City, the second to Edmond and the third to Tulsa Hale.

Following this, the Bears exploded, upsetting No. 8 ranked Moore and No. 7 ranked Midwest City. The last dual of the season saw JM pinned by Norman.

At this point, JM made some key weight pulls: David Cobb to 101; Bob Glasgow to 108; Tim Sullivant to 115; Steve Rankin to 123; Don Bardwell to 130; Paul Belflower to 141 and Rick Wightman to 157.

Bears get third at state tourney

Next came the important Mid-State tournament, and Marshall took third crowning David Cobb and Randy Stalcup champions. Steve Rankin was the only second place finisher. Bob Glasgow, Tim Sullivant, Don Bardwell and Dennis Hackney took third. Fourth place finishes went to Danny Hackney and Rick Wightman.

Then came the surprising second place finish for the Marshall matmen at the regional tournament. It was a scrappy pair of mini-brutes, Glasgow and Sullivant, who set up the dynamic finish. The Bears qualified five others wrestlers for the State tourney.

They were regional champ Stalcup, runner-up Rankin, and third placers Cobb, Dennis Hackney and Paul Belflower.

Then the wrestlers came in third at the state tourney crowning Glasgow and Stalcup champs. Rankin came in second and Cobb third.

Basketball team improves record

With a new coach and increased interest in their sport, Bear basketballers put together their best season in recent years. Eddie Evans, new Bear mentor, joined the JM staff in September coming from Tulsa Washington where his teams had compiled good records.

The Bears final season record was 8 wins and 14 losses as compared to 1, 2 or 0 wins in recent years.

Top scorers this year were led by senior Gary Noske with an 18.4 average and Gerald Knol with a 10.9 average. Other seniors who helped the team record were Larry Summers, Bob McCormick, Tim Layton and Steve McMillen.

Bomber contest highlights wins

One of the most outstanding games came late in the season against Midwest City. The Bombers were heavily favored to beat the Bears, but the Bears pulled a stunning upset outshooting their opponents for a score of 61-54.

John Marshall led all the way with occasional leads of 16 and 14 points. Leading scorer was Tim Layton followed by Gary Noske. Bob McCormick had his best game that night pulling down 22 rebounds and hitting 14 points.

Prospects for next year are good with juniors such as James Kelly, Don Trimble, Victor Dotson, Steve Cooper, Steve Klapp and Ron Dumas returning.

Swimmers place high in tourneys

John Marshall swimmers ended the season with 5th place at the State swim meet after placing 1st in Mid-State, 1st at All-City and 3rd in the OSU relays.

At State, Fritz Lehman placed second in the 100 yd. backstroke and the 400 yd. medley relay team of Lehman, Kevin Murphy, Mike Lockard and Tim Lehman also placed second.

Brad Binning placed third in the 400 yd. freestyle, and in the individual medley, Murphy placed fifth. In the 100 yd. breaststroke competition, JM placed 5, 6, and 10 with Murphy Lockard and Kim Ford coming in in that order.

The 400 yd. free relay team of Craig Kennamer, Lockard, Binning and Fritz Lehman came in 8th, and Kennamer placed 8th in the 100 yd. freestyle.

This was the first time in about six years that the swimmers had beaten arch-rivals Putnam City to win Mid-State, so prospects for next year are good.

Gymnastics gain popular appeal

Gaining in popularity, gymnastics had about 60 boys enrolled at the first of the year. By the end of the first meet, the team was down to 25 boys, with 12 varsity starters.

The JM gymnastics team showed early strength with returning juniors and seniors and some promising freshmen and sophomores.

At the first dual meet with Stillwater, JM won 128 to 125. The most outstanding gymnast of the year was senior all-around man Tony Rupert. Showing natural talent, Tony showed prowess on high bar, floor exercise and parallel bars.

After showing his capabilities in only one meet, Tony was offered a 4-year scholarship by the University of Oklahoma. Coach Joe Bob Smith said:

"With all of his ability, I think Tony has a good chance to compete on the OU team."

Spring sports begin full swing

Spring sports were just getting underway when the Gavel went to press. As usual, the weather was tricky in March and April throwing spring practice into chaos. One day it would be beautiful, spring-like weather and the next day would send the temperatures down near freezing. April brought its usual showers so that spring sports participants were never sure if a match or game would be called off.

Coaches were hopeful of successful seasons as baseball, track, tennis and golf got underway with their competition in the tough Mid-State conference.

Team members like competition

Girls' sports are divided into four major parts — basketball, softball, volleyball, track and field. Participants must not only like the sport but are required to become familiar with the rules.

The girls' sports classes begin at 2:35 with each member working out for an hour. Staying after school for practice to work on certain plays that might be confusing is sometimes necessary.

Lisa Thurman, one of the many girls participating in all four sports categories, said:

"On the day that we have a basketball game, the tension multiplies, with team members worrying about how well they will play and what the results of the final score will be."

The basketball season was indeed the most successful sports events out of the four with a 3-3 record.

Outstanding girls athletes recognized were Beth Routman and Becky Boyd.

Satisfied feeling comes to aides

Students who have an extra hour to give either to a teacher or someone in the library or office find that being an aide is a worthwhile way to fill their free time.

Grading papers, filing cards, stamping passes, taking someone's temperature or answering the switchboard are just part of an aide's work. They sometimes find a few minutes' rest and get some studying done which is a convenience to many.

When asked why she was a clinic aide, Leslie Turner replied:

"It's a beautiful place to study, and the nurse is a real nice person. Also, in the spring we have air-conditioning, and it's just fun and enjoyable."

Annual activities involve pepsters

It all began with the nervousness of tryouts, holding hands and hopeful faces. Then all in one booming announcement, dreams came true.

Hours of early-morning practices and session of criticism to improve technique, were not wasted as the pepsters again proved who was best by winning the district Coke award two years in succession.

Slumber parties, games and the traditional act of hands in the birthday cake brought memorable moments as the year rolled on.

Spirit boosted; females active

Two new attractions marched onto the scene at JM this year to help promote spirit and actively involve more students in school activities. The B-team cheerleaders and a girls' drill team, the Cubettes, were formed at the beginning of the year to help serve these purposes.

The B-team cheerleaders brought support to the Junior Varsity Bears by attending all their sports activities. Beginning the 1972-73 season with a good start was the goal of the B-team squad.

The fourteen girls divided into two groups so that they could alternate in attending sports events.

The Cubettes consisted of mainly ninth and tenth grade students who choreographed their own routines. Twenty-two Cubettes made six appearances during the year, including one at the Myriad and one day of competition at Commerce, Texas where they won a second place division rating.

Courtesy club performs services

Functioning as a service club, Courtesy Club performed various activities ushering at events held in the Civic Center, the Fairgrounds Arena or the new Myriad Convention Center. Some of the more important ushering events were concerts, plays, Ice Capades and the National Finals Rodeo.

The Courtesy Club also did many other worthwhile projects besides ushering. Plans began early before school started so that the membership would be prepared for the upcoming year.

One of the earliest activities took place when officers of last year's club were greeted early in the morning by new members and treated to a breakfast as guests of honor. Another activity, the city-wide paper drive, kept the club busy as they competed against the Key Club. Although they collected over 7,000 pounds of paper, the Courtesy Club still lost. As a result, the Key Club was treated to a skating party.

A Christmas program was given in December as members visited a senior citizens' home and presented a variety show with dancing, singing and skits.

Future teacher activities varied

Time passed quickly for the fifteen members of Future Teachers of America as they took part in varied activities during the year. Initiation of new members started the year, and the traditional fashion show at Katherine Lipe's followed. This event was held to raise funds for a scholarship given each year to a senior girl.

One of the social highlights of the year for the club was a skating party. Members gained knowledge and experience toward the vocation of their future when they visited an elementary school in the spring to observe students in their work and play.

A time for both fun and work was shared by members from across the state when the members attended the state convention held in April.

Hi-Notes active at outside events

The John Marshall Symphony Hi-Notes are one of the most active groups in the Oklahoma City area. A small portion of their outside activities for the club included usher events, such as all subscription symphony concerts plus all additional related events such as opera, ballet and other specials.

Some of their ushering events were the Ballet West, which presented two performances of the "Nutcracker Suite" and a special evening of repertoire. Other activities included the opening of the Myriad and concerts held at the Civic Center.

Arriving at each event at 6:30 p.m., they signed in, putting on identification tags, inserting flyers and receiving instructions from professional ushers so they could expertly guide in greeting and assisting concert patrons. The Hi-Notes had special uniforms which they wore in order to be recognized as a special group of students interested in helping at civic performances.

Honor Society hindered by plan

For the second consecutive year, clustering affected club activity and attendance records at most Oklahoma City high schools. Perhaps the club most directly hindered by this at John Marshall was the Honor Society.

Meetings were cut short or deleted completely because of transportation or schedule difficulties. As a result, most speakers were discontinued because of lack of attendance.

Dues and Honor Society funds were used primarily for group get-togethers in order for members to socialize more. Skating parties, picnics and progressive dinners provided activity for members.

The club consisted mainly of juniors and seniors who have two or more consecutive semesters of a 3.50 grade average or above.

Although freshmen were at JM this year, they could not be credited for initiation because of the level of their junior high association.

Key Club active; offers services

Key Club kept actively involved in school and outside services this year. Before the year began, president Martin Conley and vice-president, Phil Heard attended a national meeting in Washington D. C.

The main school project was a Key Club Calendar which was a major money-raising project for the club's fund.

During Key Club Week in March, the club sponsored Wayne Wells Day to honor the 1972 Olympic Gold Medal winner, who is a graduate of John Marshall.

A Christmas party for senior citizens was held in December, and the Key Club Dance was in the spring.

Boys' "O" Club members active

Hard work and determination are all part of being a member of Boys' "O" Club. The boys spend countless hours improving skills so that they can letter in their sport.

To keep up the enthusiasm despite long practice sessions, it is important to have a winning season. Losing or gaining weight, being totally exhausted but still striving to win in the last quarter are all familiar things to these sports-minded boys.

The main project of the club is the sponsorship of the annual Homecoming Dance. They also nominate the All-Sports Queen candidates and escort the girls during halftime coronation of the Homecoming game.

Outstanding girls presented letters

John Marshall girls who enjoyed participating in sports made up the membership of the Girls' "O" Club, which was organized at the beginning of the second semester. In order to receive their letter, they must have played in more than $\frac{1}{2}$ of all their varsity games. Letters were bought with money collected at the beginning of the year.

Selection of the "best girl athlete" from among the club membership was one of the highlights of the year for club members. The annual picnic held at the end of the school year was another memorable occasion.

Boosting spirit is Council's goal

Planning pep assemblies and striving to achieve more school spirit was the main objective of the Pep Council. It was composed of all cheerleaders, the band drum major, band president, and president and vice-president of each pep club.

The Council, which met each Monday morning in the library, decided when pep assemblies would be held to help boost the morale of players and actively involve more students. These meetings also decided how much time would be devoted to each group.

The Council also sought to interest more students by publicizing their individual organization or promoting school spirit enough to inspire others to become actively involved.

Pep Club

Spirit aroused; by Pep Club

A club organized to promote enthusiasm and interest, Pep Club strived to create an air of unity for the various activities at JM. Sometimes it meant getting up at 3:00 a.m. to distribute good luck signs on the athlete's houses. Project meetings were also a common occurrence as girls met once a week to paint signs and complete projects.

The two pep clubs, J-Mettes and Tri-Kettes met every Thursday to plan the upcoming activities. A Pep Club Beau was named by each club near the end of the school year. Planning the March dance where the Beau was to be presented kept officers and committees busy preparing and completing the final plans.

Each month, "girl of the month" awards were presented to the one girl who had obtained the most merits in the month. Although extra merits could be acquired members were required to attend a certain number of games during the year.

Whether the Bears won or lost the pep club made their presence known at each activity. Jerelyn Kidd felt this way about the pep clubs existence,

"I think pep club is a big boost to activities and it gives the girls a feeling that they are a part of the game."

Various groups crown royalties

For those students who tried their best to excel in school work and organizations, Mr. and Miss Bear royalty fulfilled a need. The entrants were required to have completed a questionnaire measuring academic, athletic and extra-curricular activities that the student had participated in. The point system was drawn up by Student Body Council members so that all students could be fairly recognized for their contributions during the year.

J-Mette and Tri-Kette pep clubs followed tradition and elected two senior boys as Pep Club Beaux. Each Club selected the boys they felt had done the most to promote school spirit, either through sports or other means.

Each Pep Club kept its beau a secret until the Pep Club Dance where the coronation ceremony was held.

Student Council becomes course

This year for the first time, Student Body Council was a class. The Council, a human relations class, was held during third hour. Representatives took advantage of the class to report each Wednesday the activities of the Council.

Representatives were elected from each of the four grades. At the beginning of the school year, the student body elected 13 representatives from the freshman and sophomore class to positions.

Representatives led the student body in collecting newspapers for the WKY paper drive. Political Awareness Week was October 23-27. Throughout the week, 36 speakers lectured to classes to bring new ideas and answer questions concerning politics. During the week a Red, White and Blue Day was held, and students were given an opportunity to vote in a mock election and express their choice for the Presidential race.

After the season's first basketball game, Sammy Moon and Mike Fulsom, disc-jockeys for WKY and KFJL respectively, led an all-school dance.

In December an assembly was held for the annual Toys for Tots drive. Admission for the assembly was one toy or a 50¢ donation.

First semester activities also included the United Appeal drive and the selling of Bear Rings, school directory.

An American Heritage week in February highlighted history of several ethnic groups.

Thespians grow; merits add up

The year for Thespians began with a "mixer" in the fall which included entertainment by club members.

"This year we had a much larger membership in Thespians and more activities than in past years," Mrs. Peggy Long sponsor said.

In October, Thespians went to the state conference in Lawton where they attended various drama workshops.

A clown troupe consisting of approximately fifty club members was organized for the Homecoming Parade. The troupe also entertained at Nichols Hills Elementary School during the Christmas season and were available to entertain at birthday parties throughout the year.

During February, Thespians sponsored the annual Valentine Choo-choo which enabled students to buy Valentines which were delivered by club members. Throughout the year, Thespian members ushered at the Oklahoma Theatre Center for plays such as "The Last of the Red Hot Lovers" and "Rain."

Thespians also presented a children's play in the spring. A new addition this year included acting awards presented to outstanding drama students.

The judges were chosen from OCU and other places outside of Marshall. An "Oscars" banquet was held in the spring and awards were presented.

Bears lose; still a "Knight for Nancy"

The week of October 27 was the center of much enthusiasm as it brought Homecoming events. The week began with final preparations for club floats to be entered in the annual parade.

Much as usual, and yet somewhat different each year, the parade presented a spectacular conglomeration of color, creativity and imagination. Clubs competed for top awards, and as usual, there was happiness and disappointment.

Climax to the week's excitement was the Homecoming game against Northwest. Although Marshall lost the game, sad faces were brightened by the crowning of the All-Sports Queen. At halftime the game fans found it was truly a "Knight for Nancy" as Nancy Trimble received the crown. As head varsity cheerleader, Nancy also served on her sophomore council and was a sophomore attendant to Miss Bear.

Robi Whitnah, also a varsity cheerleader was named princess of football and wrestling; Lindy Stanley was princess of basketball and baseball; Sheila Brown was named princess of track and swimming; and Sandra Smethers was princess of golf and tennis.

Football captain Randy Stalcup, crowned the queen. Escorting the princesses were Monty Priest, Mitch McFarland, Rick Wightman, Jimmy Hodges and Rod McDaniels.

Students look to college, careers

Included in the business curriculum are such classes as typing, shorthand, business machines, cooperative office education and bookkeeping. All are aimed at preparing students for college or a career.

Seniors have an opportunity to work toward scholarships for college in business. Cooperative office education students hold jobs as part of their curriculum.

Weepuls, little red and blue bears, suckers and books for adult night school were sold by the Future Business Leaders this year to help save toward a trip to the National Business Convention in Washington.

OWL program changes English

The English department could easily be spotlighted as one of the most versatile departments at John Marshall this year. It maintained its high position throughout numerous changes in curriculum and faculty, and remains one of the most important departments in the school.

Among eighteen English teachers, nine new teachers were added, four of whom taught ninth grade English while others replaced those teachers who left last year.

In Mid-November, Mrs. Bessie Lou Shofstall resigned because of a move to Arizona, and Mr. James Stephens replaced her as department head.

Activities began with a new list of one and two semester courses that instigated the OWL (Oral, Written, Literature) program. Many new courses were introduced, and each had its own focal point. The program provided a more varied and interesting selection of both elective and credit English courses.

Pickwick group publishes '9017'

Among new English courses were Written Composition, Short Story and Poetry, and Novel I and II. The OWL program required enrollment during both first and second semesters and involved only one-semester courses which were grouped to fulfill credit requirements. Enrollment resembled that of college in that each student had the responsibility of signing a card to a particular course and class he wanted and placing it in the counselor's box. Cards were then processed, and as far as possible, the student was enrolled in the class of his choice.

Also very versatile was the Pickwick Club, JM's literary organization. As every year, the club published "9017," the school's literary magazine. Plans began early during first semester. Submissions were open to all students, and the staff undertook the job of selecting the best short stories, essays, art work and poetry for use. The club also published a mimeographed newspaper periodically during the year.

Variation keynotes art curriculum

The art department of John Marshall offers more different types of art classes and a more versatile curriculum than any other high school in the city. Besides Beginning Art and Arts and Crafts, the regular Art classes go through Advanced Art IV. The Advanced Arts and Crafts include pottery and weaving. The art department also offers Commercial Art, which is basically advertising design; Ceramics and Sculpture, Fashion and Interior

Design.

There are five teachers who instruct all of these classes. Besides classes, these teachers help prepare entries for the annual Young Talent in Oklahoma. Seven winners are chosen out of hundreds of contestants, and each winner receives a $150 scholarship. There are two other contests during the year, the Central State Art Festival, and the Red Ridge Museum drawing contest.

Dramatists stage two major productions

Below: Enduring the temptations of evil is Randy White, who portrays Dinny in the fall production of "Dinny and the Witches." Below Right: In the same production Terry Howard rehearses her part.

"Dinny and the Witches," a fairy tale play of a boy ruling the world, started a busy year of work for the drama department. It ran for two nights and had good audience response.

After the first play closed, many Drama II students worked out one and two person interpretives and took them to tournaments.

At the end of December, play try-outs again came to JM. This time, "To Kill a Mockingbird," a realistic drama about racism in the south, was put into production.

Many hours of work went into the plays for each production. Cast and crew members worked long hours after school and Saturdays to complete production.

No matter how hard the work was, every time tryout time came, a surplus of students tried out.

The debate classes and National Forensic League worked hand in hand at JM. Speech students had to earn 25 points before they could qualify for membership.

Instead of staying within traditional guidelines of only two or three meetings a year, members worked to make NFL more active in school and social activities.

Band performs at games, rallies

The "Pride of John Marshall," JM's marching and concert band, performed at all home football games, pep rallies, held a Christmas concert and participated in spring contests.

They received a superior rating at regional marching contest at Del City in the fall. Claudia Bradford, Susie Mittasch and Mary Maxwell also received superior rating for their majorette ensemble.

JM attend other contests throughout the year including the Edmond Festival at Central State, the district contest at Oklahoma City University and the state contest at Oklahoma State.

Brenda Jones, Jeff Dawson, Bob Asmussen and Paul Kearby were chosen for the All-State band.

Besides contests, the band held a spring concert and banquet.

Each year the band chooses one girl to reign as Band Queen and four girls as her attendants. To be eligible, the queen must be both a band member and a senior.

The 1972-73 Band Queen was Susie Mittasch. Her escort was Stuart Wallace. Susie was a majorette, a member of the band council and a former Band Queen attendant.

This year's band queen attendants were senior Claudia Bradford escorted by Jim Foreman, Junior Carol Carr, escorted by Tom Parker, senior Pam Lackey, escorted by Gary Brown and senior Nancy Richards, escorted by Mark Asmussen.

"New World Symphony" by Dvoark, was the music selected and practiced by the JM orchestra to play at their spring concert.

Other main events included the Edmond Festival held at Central State, the district music festival at Oklahoma City University and the state festival at Oklahoma State University.

Cathy Moler, Chris Hudson, Nona Roman, Robert Dewey and Eric Coates were chosen for the All-State Orchestra, as they joined musicians from all over the state.

Choraleers sing at varied events

An important part of vocal music at John Marshall involves a group of selected students known as the Choraleers.

This small vocal group represents the school at various activities including regular performances at the Britton Kiwanis meetings and numerous school assemblies ranging from the Modern Dance Assembly to the Honor Society Initiation. They also performed for such things as the faculty Christmas Breakfast.

The Choraleers sponsored the All-School Talent Show which was held during October. They planned to use the $500 raised for stoles and robes.

The Choraleers, like other choirs at JM looked forward to their annual concert in May where awards were given and queens crowned.

Singing groups choose royalty

All JM choirs, including Mixed Chorus and Girls' Glee Club participated in district and state contests, which were in March. Individual soloists, duets and ensembles participated also.

Besides contests, the vocal department participated in the Modern Dance assembly. They also elected royalty. Choraleer queen is Vicki Watson and the attendant is Sheila Brown. Mixed Chorus Queen is Lisa Lehew, and her attendant is Kaudett Reed. Girls' Glee queen is Angela Cella and her attendant is Terri Maynor.

Each year the Vocal Department chooses Mr. and Miss Music, based on personality and service. To be eligible a person must be both a Choraleer and a senior. This year the honorees were Gary Childers and Kathy Strange.

Other awards given by the vocal department were the most outstanding male vocalist. Ben Burnett received that award, and Kathy Strange received the award as most outstanding female vocalist and outstanding service award.

Saundra Shadid, Marion Norton and Regina Warren were selected to represent John Marshall in the All-State choir, one of the highest honors given.

Five languages offered students

The language department is made up of five major courses, French, German, Latin, Spanish and Russian. All language teachers agreed that the development and the understanding of a new language is an important basis in learning it.

The Spanish Club was quite active this year as the beginning of the year found them holding a progressive dinner. A Halloween costume party was the next activity of the year. Initiation took place in November, and all initiates were required to wear paper bull horns all day at school. That night initiates were heard singing "La Cucaracha" in Shepherd Mall. Christmas they held a skating party at the fair grounds and went to Shakey's later.

Latin scholars celebrate Yule

An annual event of Latin Club is their Christmas caroling party in Latin combined with a standard Christmas party later. The club also planned a culture tour of Chicago.

Other projects included the making of their own movies concerning either myth or spoof of some kind. The end of the year brought the traditional Latin Banquet where the entire group wore Latin togas to provide an authentic atmosphere.

Language clubs have active year

The German Club held several Christmas projects in December. They sold candles to students and other patrons and collected food and toys for a needy family during Christmas. Other activities on their list were a costume party and dance, a Foeching, which was also attended by the French Club.

While other language clubs were busy with their activities, the French Clubs also filled the year with several excursions. A trip to a French restaurant, Crepe de France, was their first event. Spring vacation they were to participate in the annual trip to New Orleans, stopping at small villages along the way. Other events included the French Club banquet and a progressive dinner where the students tried their taste for new and different French foods.

Staff members chosen to reign

Honored, as in years past, for work on one of the school's publications, this year's Annual Belle and Beau are Kathy Taylor and David Cobb.

Five senior boys and five senior girls from either the Advocate or Gavel staff were nominated for the honor by the two staffs. Then, each person who had bought a subscription was allowed to vote for the winners.

Results of that election, held in early January, were kept secret until the yearbook presentation assembly.

Kathy, one of the editors of th'e Advocate, has been a staff member three years. Also a debater, she represented JM at Girls State.

David is a member of the Varsity wrestling team and has captured numerous honors. He is photo editor of the Gavel.

Gavel strives to continue tradition

Staff editors Stephanie Hutchison and Dana Jezek began plans for the 1973 Gavel when they attended a weekend workshop at the University of Oklahoma in June. Because the 1972 Gavel was named top yearbook in Oklahoma, Medalist and All-Columbian for its design, they faced a challenge.

Meetings to discuss yearbook plans with each other, adviser Mrs. Louanne Ward, and the staff, came often during the summer. With details to be ironed out, a new publisher to know, sections to be decided, organization took time.

School began and with it there were 32 eager staff members. Besides coping with subscription sales and candy sales, the staff worked to understand a yearbook being divided into three sections with three different styles, all within one book.

Mid-winter with its ice and snow storms set the Gavel a week behind schedule. However, with extra work by editors and staff, and an extra push by photographers, the yearbook was ready for its final deadline.

Producing the 1973 Gavel was work and fun at the same time. Interesting things happened, some disastrous, some funny. In trying to make the yearbook as creative and relevant as possible, the theme reflected student interest through the use of polls dealing with state, local, national and world issues.

In this way, the staff hoped to make this a book that would truly reflect 1973 as it was at John Marshall.

The math department at John Marshall offered a wide selection of math subjects for the students to choose from. Freshman and sophomore students studied general math, algebra and geometry. Some students dropped math all together after their sophomore year, but many continue to study the course, planning their futures involving math careers. For these students, math analysis, Algebra II and trigonometry were offered. Longer time blocks were provided for some math courses offering more time for students to organize ideas and study the fundamentals of the course.

The opinions of students varied concerning math and the math department. One student had this to say:

"It is really great to be able to choose the math course you want to take. In junior high school you had no choice. I like the fact that the choice is yours as to whether to continue math. After your sophomore year, you can drop math completely if you want."

Courses offered to train students

Three of the vocational courses offered are woodworking, drafting and auto mechanics. Students enrolled in woodworking learned how to use hand and power tools safely and correctly. Woodworking helped students express themselves as they built projects of their own design.

Learning the graphic arts and being able to draw complicated designs in the right dimensions are all a part of drafting. Students learned how to approach problems in a logical manner as they felt that the study of graphic arts is basic to communication.

Construction of a pickup for the school and repair of cars for the general public occupied the time of auto mechanics students.

Prospective chefs study methods

Cooking different foods, trying to achieve perfection in new recipes and different dishes is just one of the goals of the Vocational Foods class. Popular with male students, the class bakes cookies and cakes for sale to students and teacher, and with the money earned, they are able to improve their department. Each of the 40 students enrolled are encouraged to find a job that has some relation to food preparation. A minimum of 10 hours a week on the job is required. The class is taught by Mrs. Stella Heath, who said about the purpose of the class:

"I feel the main objective of the course is to prepare young workers for the food industry."

Many of the students who are enrolled in the class are also members of Chefs' Club. The organization has nearly thirty members. One of their most popular annual functions is attendance at the Cheese Festival at Oklahoma State University. They also eat at different restaurants each month.

Students' jobs provide credits

Distributive Education supplied valuable working time for many students while at the same time supplying necessary credits. Most worked in the afternoons at businesses all over the northern half of Oklahoma City.

For the first time, the school store was run by DE students this year, and numerous new items were added to the inventory.

Another vocational course, electronics, involved the construction and analysis of such things as amplifiers and power supplies.

Students learn coiffure styling

The cosmetology department opens many new opportunities for junior and senior girls who would like to work in an area of cosmetology.

If a girl would like to get an operator's license so she can work in a beauty salon, she must complete 1000 hours in class learning to perform such skills as permanent waving, hair setting, hair cutting, tinting and many other tasks.

Girls are enrolled for approximately three hours a day, and must be at least 16 years old. The girls involved in cosmetology worked hard to prepare for a styling contest in Tulsa.

Enrolees are also eligible to become a member of Vocational Industrial Clubs of America. This year's VICA Club was busy gathering and distributing food to needy families during Christmas. Their main project this year was to help the underprivileged in any way possible.

Classes stress physical fitness

Physical education for both sexes is an important part of JM's curriculum.

Boys' gym classes are divided into squads to bring a high amount of competition among the boys. The sports in which they compete are touch football, basketball, softball, weight lifting, and track and field. About the program Coach Howard Hall said:

"The program is shaped to introduce the boys to team sports while making them aware of the need for physical fitness."

As a result of this policy, the coaches have calisthenics every day. They also involve the boys in qualifying for the President's Physical Fitness Award, which requires hard work and a variety of events necessary to fulfill the requirements.

Other boys' coaches include Clyde Ellis and Joe Bob Smith.

Girls' P.E. not only includes kickball, softball, basketball, badminton and track but also a modern dance class. Mrs. Dollie Turner teaches the class two hours each day, and dance units are given in girls' P.E. This activity acquaints the girls with different types of dance. Mrs. Bertie Hawthorn and Miss Linda Johnson direct girls' physical education.

Driver's license is ultimate goal

The Driver's Education department plays an important role in the curriculum for sophomores. Learning defensive driving skills and auto safety is the most important part of the course.

These things lead to the ultimate goal of receiving a driver's license. The basic fundamentals of driving were learned with the aid of simulators so that the new drivers would have the necessary skills to be safe on the city streets.

Students tried to make good grades in the course to keep their insurance rates at the lowest cost possible. Five teachers instruct the sophomores.

Also part of the department was sponsorship of the Safety Council. With a representative from each advisory, they were primarily concerned with improving safety conditions around the school.

They made a few suggestions on how the bad parking lot situation could be solved, and they were also involved in the Inter-City Safety Council to promote safety.

Science is way of life

From the science courses at John Marshall, students find that science is a way of life, an activity of the mind, a challenge to the imagination, and a place where one can involve himself. The course shows how knowledge arises from the interpretation of data and proceeds on the basis of concepts and assumptions that change as our knowledge of science grows.

There are seven science teachers at John Marshall. Every year, the course may be different, because principles and concepts change. Because it is a required subject, it helps in understanding of life, and is important in many careers.

Victor Dotson summed up science this way:

"Science is a very interesting course. There are so many different things that you go through that are interesting. At first, it can seem very boring writing notes and looking up all that material. Then after you've been through all the research, the most exciting things begin to happen. The first time you perform a successful experiment or dissection, you really become aware of how amazing the world is and how significant it is."

Many Marshall students travel to Northeast to explore such courses as Chemistry in this class taught by Mr. Charles Goodman.

Inquiry method used in history

The social studies department grew larger this year, adding seven new teachers and classes in Black History and Human Relations. Three courses were added to the regular classes in history, geography, economics and government.

The history department took a new approach to studying history this year. Instead of the regular lecture book method, they used the inquiry method, where questions were asked and more discussion was used.

Black History classes, which were new this year, kept busy with exciting material prepared by department chairman Bob Adams. They had films, guest speakers, drawings, dramatizations and individual projects. Since few books were available for this subject, projects were a better source for teaching.

Right: Timothy Roberts uses class time to catch up on reading for his geography class.

An important addition to the social studies curriculum this year was the Human Relations classes. The class, taught by Mr. Jerry O'Hare, dealt with understanding among individuals and groups. Mr. O'Hare also taught psychology and sociology.

The broad purpose of the class was to bring about a better understanding between people. Much individual work was done as Mr. O'Hare encouraged each student to set a goal and work toward it in a definite way.

One hour classes often found the groups involved in a discussion that was hard to break off. However, the main achievement of the classes was the realization that each person was an individual and that most people have difficulty accepting "groups" of people. While there was no proof to show what effect the class had on students, Mr. O'Hare said:

"I can only hope that there would be more tolerance towards other people."

Activities under way; principals participate

Along with the 1972-73 school year came new challenges for every aspect of life at John Marshall and other city schools.

At School Board meetings, members faced new problems, making key decisions on such controversies as busing and the future quality of education.

As new principal, Mr. Robin Gaston took the initiative and showed the student body what it took to get things done. Commenting on the school year, he stated:

"I feel the school year has been very successful in that I see the student body pulling together in athletics and in scholastics."

Mr. Nolen Morgan, Mr. George Chapman and Mr. Bill Langwell returned to their duties as vice-principals responding to the new school year by becoming involved in student life.

Discussing future activities for John Marshall are activities director Jean Munde and her secretary Ruth Dodson.

Once again this year, the secretaries were depended upon to keep the school running smoothly. Every secretary played an important role whether she was keeping records, checking attendance or helping administrators.

The attendance secretaries' jobs changed a little when a new attendance system was put into effect. The Do Not Admit List was abolished, and a list of those students who were excused was sent out every morning.

The job of the cafeteria staff was increased due to the larger number of students enrolled at John Marshall.

The custodians kept busy with a year of traditional duties such as unlocking doors when keys were lost, trying to keep the school heated, and keeping the overall appearance of the school attractive.

Increased enrollment requires larger staff

Many new teachers were welcomed to JM's faculty to help take on the greatly increased enrollment (nearly 2900) who came this year with the Finger Plan. Because of the addition of the freshman class, the jump went from 88 members last year to 108 this year.

Providing space also proved to be a problem, so that the addition of portable classrooms was necessary, causing more problems for teachers and students alike. It seemed there wasn't enough time between classes, but Mr. Robin Gaston was often heard saying:

"Five minutes is plenty of time to get to class. If you can't make it, I'll walk with you."

Students found that if they tried they could make it to class, and it gave the teachers more time in which to teach.

Addition of freshmen has effect on faculty

The addition of freshmen in high schools this year affected the faculty as well as the students. Some teachers who taught at junior highs last year were transferred to John Marshall; and teachers who taught here last year experienced the difficulties that go with an expanded staff. Mrs. Ellie Jones, who came to this school from Eisenhower Junior High, had this to say about the change:

"I like teaching at a high school better, because it's larger and has more clubs and activities to offer students. I am in favor of having freshmen in high schools and have been for a number of years, because I think they are given more privileges and opportunities in a high school building."

Teachers participate in outside activities

Contrary to common belief, teachers enjoy activities outside the classroom. There are varied interests throughout the JM faculty.

Many teachers have traveled starting in the United States, going to Europe and even as far as Japan.

Nature and the outdoors capture some faculty members in their spare time. Mr. Richard Thompson once said to his class:

"Man can find himself and identify with nature. It helps calm my nerves and make me able to face the world."

Antiques are collected by a few teachers. Mrs. Virginia Palmer displays some in her home.

An essential part of most faculty members' lives is exercise. This ranges from walking, jogging, riding bicycles to karate as exercise and entertainment.

Helping to construct the winning freshman float is Mrs. Ellie Jones.

Finger plan begins; freshmen find place

For the first time in seven years freshmen attended classes in this complex, confused, but exciting world of John Marshall.

The freshman class, 700 strong, was moved into high schools because of the Finger integration plan. Some students moved to suburbs, and others went to private schools to keep from participating in the plan. The majority of pre-enrolled freshmen did attend JM, and they had no trouble adjusting to the court order.

Most did have some trouble adjusting to one concept of the school, and that was the size. As Lauren Little put it:

"About the first two or three weeks, I was really lost, but as the year went on, I found my place."

As the desegregation order sent freshmen to high school, citywide, the freshman class at Marshall met the order with varying enthusiasm.

Many felt that it was a good chance to experience a larger school body, including different racial groups. Others weren't quite so happy but felt that high school was favorable over junior high.

Most said that the black/white ratio had changed little since junior high, and little trouble between blacks and whites was noted, even though some minor problems had to be worked out.

The general consensus of the freshman class was that despite the disadvantage of being sent to high school, some needed experiences were gained.

Freshmen like four years at one school

Entering John Marshall gave the freshmen a chance to excel in fields faster than junior high. Some felt that the opportunity was greater than in junior high. More interesting classes and more variety contributed to this belief. One said:

"The teachers don't teach down to you as though you are babies, but they helped us learn." Students who went into fields of competition, or students who wanted to specialize in one field had the opportunity of staying with the same program and most likely the same teacher four years. They didn't have to worry about losing a year between high school and junior high.

The wide variety of classes was an important reason that many felt the freshman year in high school was a good plan.

Council unites class; plans many activities

Trying to unite such a large class was no easy job, but the freshman council and officers made major strides in that direction.

The main project of the class was a "Sweetheart Ball." They began plans in the fall, and many hours went into the preparation.

Besides planning their major event, the council sponsored the class in decorating the hall during Homecoming and Christmas. In this way freshmen took advantage of the situation by mixing "human relations" with work as they continued to improve their enthusiasm.

While unity was hard to achieve, the freshmen did become a class in spite of the fact that there were over 700 individuals coming from two junior highs.

Learning played a major role for freshmen, but having fun ran a close second.

Most freshmen felt that fun was just as important as learning because they could keep their mind on studying better if they let emotions out at other times.

Unplanned fun was the best, some said, because it gave an opportunity to get to know people unexpectedly.

Organized activities were sometimes disasters because they didn't live up to expectations.

Playing jokes on friends and substitute teachers was most obvious in the atmosphere of the school.

However, there was one thing that most freshmen agreed upon, and that was — whenever they had fun, the kind that came naturally was the best.

C-team takes first; class gets involved

Many extra-curricular activities helped to make the year complete for freshmen.

The freshmen football team won eight consecutive games, giving them a perfect record. The Year of the Bear became the Year of the Cubs as they combined to provide a winning spark.

Class members got involved in journalism, speech, drama, art, woodwork, and home economics to fill the electives along with the usual English and math courses.

The freshmen were as active as any class in school, joining clubs, helping promote spirit and getting involved mostly to have fun.

During the year, the Class of '76 could never be accused of being insignificant. They were always there.

Mr. Tom Hutchinson explains Roman Counting Numbers to his freshman math class.

More freedom given; high school preferred

The freshman class had many advantages and disadvantages they hadn't faced in junior high.

Some activities that they could have had in junior high were denied the class. Besides missing activities, they also missed the chance to be the oldest in the school, and many felt that they had to act more "grown up" since they were in high school. They planned their sweetheart ball, had a broader selection of classes and really enjoyed the freedom they were given.

As one freshman Jaye Wright put it:

"We have more freedom than we did in junior high; the administration trusts us more. Even though we didn't get to do a lot of things we looked forward to, things really balanced out."

Transportation proved to be the largest obstacle the freshmen faced. Since they had moved to a new school where events weren't centered in the school plant, many problems arose.

Most were forced to stay at school during lunch or walk to nearby restaurants. After games, many couldn't go "messaging around," because of lack of transportation.

The same thing applied to meetings that didn't take place after school, and even before and after-school meetings were a problem. Freshmen had to make a special effort to get to the right place at the right time. This wasn't such a problem in junior high, but in a school where the majority is highly mobile, hardships are put on those who have transportation problems.

Students fully relax when confusion ends

It was easy getting involved in a high school larger than any school most sophomores had ever attended. Making friends went smoothly considering the different personalities mixed together. One girl said:

"The first day I walked in the door I almost turned around and walked back out — but then I couldn't find the door."

A boy said:

"I expected a lot of confusion, but this kind of confusion confuses me."

Sophomore teachers allowed students to arrive late to class the first week, but after that only strong alibis were accepted. Students had to brush up on their study habits again while homework piled up for a long hard year of learning.

Sophomores found that being in high school gave the advantage of a wide variety of curriculum. They discovered that courses were offered in such subjects as shorthand, Typing II, electronics and human relations — subjects that could be helpful later in life. Besides tackling homework, many sophomores held after-school and weekend jobs.

One girl stated:

"There's so much more to buy now that I'm in high school. It seems that everytime I turn around I need a book for English or more money for lunch. I found early in the year that I'd have to get a job."

As for parents, they didn't seem to mind jobs as long as homework was done and grades were satisfactory.

Newcomers exchange exciting school spirit

For a newcomer in a school to become involved, there are many groups and activities that may be joined to brighten up an ordinary day. Sophomores took part in the paper drive and Political Awareness Week even though they weren't old enough to vote. Sports events broke up occasional monotonous weeks, and sophomores found it exciting sharing school spirit with their new friends.

Pep rallies were something new and with the choice of whether or not to attend, most curious sports-minded people chose to attend and help cheer the athletes on to a victory.

Potential starts were discovered in the drama department, choir and in band and orchestra. Thus, sophomores began to make their contribution to the school.

Activities could help brighten average day

John Marshall offers a club for almost every interest. Sophomores took advantage of the situation, and there were only a few students who couldn't be found in at least one organization.

Many of the sophomores could be found in either band or orchestra, and some were even known to be in both. A large percentage of the girls joined one of the two pep clubs, relying on "big sisters" to transport them to games and project meetings. Boys involved themselves mostly in sports and made up JM's B-teams.

Sophomores also contributed their enthusiasm by donating paper for the citywide paper drive, participating in drama, yelling at pep rallies, and bringing toys and clothing during the Toys for Tots Drive.

Sophomores use simulators to help them get the feel of driving.

Sophomores involved outside of Marshall

Besides school-oriented activities sophomores involved themselves in organizations outside of school.

Many students studied the arts, such as piano, voice, ballet and art lessons. Schedules always seemed to be full, with dates, football games and church activities also taking up much leisure time.

As religion was a major source of private time, many students were found attending prayer breakfasts or chapel during the weekdays. One sophomore boy had this to say about his busy schedule:

"I can't find time to do any extra activities involving clubs at John Marshall. I feel that a lot of the school's lack of participation is due to this factor of tight schedules."

Schedules may have been hectic, but most sophomores seemed contented with their lifestyles.

In spite of dodging eggs and water balloons, sophomores completed their Homecoming float. Signs painted very carefully with red and blue paint had to be dragged into garages for protection from flying objects. After the attacks ceased, the float was exhibited in the Homecoming parade. They were proud of the entry in spite of the fact that it was not a prize winner. Among comments from disgruntled sophomores was the following:

"It really isn't fair for some people to try to ruin our float. The spirit of competition should be constructive rather than destructive."

In spite of the minor incidents, members of the float committee agreed that even winning first prize wouldn't have beat the fun of working on their first float.

Opportunities knock as waiting decreases

Sophomores are kind of "in-betweens." Most of them are not quite sixteen and have been waiting so long to reach this exciting age when opportunities knock at their car-door step. Sophs await licenses with much excitement

One of the definite disadvantages of being a sophomore is the absence of a driver's license. Sophomores looked longingly at juniors and seniors who were able to drive to lunch, school and home. Most class members found themselves walking to lunch at nearby places, or if the weather didn't permit walking, the Bears' Den became a popular lunch spot.

Fortunately most of the sophomores received their licenses before the year was over, condensing the pedestrian problem. However, with new licenses the parking problem became even more apparent as sophomores began to reach their sixteenth birthday.

In spite of parking problems, sophomores were delighted to have the chance to provide their own transportation.

Sophomores explore higher learning fields

Because they were new to the school, many sophomores felt lost during the first few weeks of school. Soon new acquaintances became friends, and sophomores adjusted to John Marshall.

For the first time, the reality of the future became present, and sophomores began to think of decisions concerning their college plans. Most decided to further their education by attending college. Because of this, College Night, sponsored by the PTSA attracted more of their attention.

As the choice of classes broadened each year of high school, the opinions and experiences of students were broadened.

But, no matter what their plans for the future, most sophomores seemed satisfied with the present.

Groups were a good learning instrument used in many English classes to discuss today's social problems. Students agreed that when problems were discussed in groups they could be understood more clearly. Students were apt to express ideas in a small group rather than having to speak in front of a whole class. This created an atmosphere of informality that made it easier for them to express their feelings. Much was gained by group discussions because each person expressed his opinion based on an experience or what he had gained from reading. Sophomores learned that by hearing everyone's point of view there was more possibility of arriving at the right solution to an issue. Group discussions also gave an inside look of what another person's true feelings were.

Owl system added; preferred by classes

This year's junior class totaled 679 students, second highest total in the school, topped only by sophomores. Juniors held many of the highest and most important offices at JM.

Curriculum for juniors also underwent changes. This year more classes were mixed with seniors than in years past. The English department broke the tradition of American Literature the junior year and English Literature the senior year when they added the OWL program. This new program consisted of one-semester courses requiring one oral, one written and one literature class. Each of the three offered several different courses from which to select.

Literature courses were still offered to interested students. However, more people participated in the OWL program than in standard courses.

Elected a new way, by junior class members according to their elementary school district, junior council members began the year with ratification of their constitution.

Made up of 20 juniors and five officers, the council was sponsored by Miss Cynthia Langford and Mrs. Peggy Hladik.

Before many activities could start, junior dues were collected. The $4. dues went to any activity sponsored by the council.

Biggest of these activities was the Prom, which was held in May and given by the junior class for the seniors. Money left over at the end of the year went to next year's seniors.

The junior council also designed the class of '74 rings and during Homecoming sponsored the junior hall decorations.

In November all juniors were able to choose and purchase class rings. The rings this year were different in shape from those before. When asked about the rings, one student said:

PSAT exam offered; overall per cent small

The Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test (PSAT) was given at John Marshall October 29. The test, based on a sample of knowledge and skills, is given in preparation for the SAT given to the seniors next year. The test also helps to evaluate plans for college and choose senior courses. The PSAT is divided into two parts, verbal and mathematical, abilities important in college.

Out of 679 juniors, only 93 students took advantage of the test which is only 13.9 per cent of the class. When one student was asked about the test, she said:

"The test was hard, yet I was glad to have had the experience to get an idea of things I will need to work on."

Studying for the first of several college exams, Polly Guthrie prepares for the PSAT test.

Activities considered source for pleasure

School is only a part of a student's busy schedule. Although it is true that some students cannot find time to do many outside activities because of clubs, band or school work, many students do participate in various outside activities. All of these take up time after 3:35 several days a week. The activities range anywhere from church functions to sports or dances. One youth choir, made up almost entirely of JM students is the Celebration Choir. This is one way in which students give their time to something they enjoy and can relate to.

Other activities take up at least one to three nights a week, not including private practice. Boys' activities reach as far as basketball for their church or other groups as a source of enjoyment and occupation of spare time.

Many juniors must assume a job during high school years, so the task of getting a job descends upon a wide majority of juniors. Since this year students were old enough to drive, they usually wanted to work. Students working part time were able to get a work permit from school the last hour of the day.

One student said:

"It's a big help getting to leave school and go to work. It gives me five extra hours a week."

Several students had jobs for a class such as agricultural occupations. Others worked at jobs which might lead to future employment such as doing school sports on the radio or assisting a veterinarian.

A big part of every school year is the event of Homecoming. This year juniors worked hard on preparations which included the float, decorations for the halls and plans for the parade.

The time and work spent on the junior float seemed in vain when the juniors were disqualified from participating in the parade after some class members egged and destroyed the sophomore float.

Volunteers give time; professionals assisted

At the age of 16, most people can and do work for a salary. There are a few however, who do volunteer work for someone else. Each person has a particular cause for which they give their time. Some volunteer through church groups to help underprivileged children. One junior, Carol Novak, works two Saturdays a month at Deaconess Hospital. She enjoys working with people and plans to go into nursing as a profession.

On the other hand, time is essential to others, and volunteer work would be impossible. A junior boy said:

"I don't do volunteer work, and really I've never given it too much thought. I don't have the time, but it is a worthwhile thing, and all students who can should contribute some extra time."

Stopping a moment from her volunteer work, Carol Novak discusses her day's activities as a candy striper with her volunteer supervisor.

Night classes taken; help early graduates

In order to graduate early, many juniors attended night classes and summer school. Because of the new school districting, many juniors chose to graduate early this year. Others want to graduate early because they felt it was wasteful to spend more than three years in high school. Some juniors took more classes in order to graduate early from JM instead of being bused to another school area.

Some juniors also felt that graduating early provided the chance to stay out of school at least a year before entering the stress of college life. Another reason for early graduation is the extra years required for graduation from medical or law school, and an early start is always welcome.

One subject quite popular with seniors is drama. One senior said:

"I never stay with anything three years if I don't love it. I have been associated with the drama department since I've been in high school, and believe me, it hasn't been all fun and games. It has consisted of everything from taking cuttings to contest to being involved in a school play.

Being in a play takes everything you've got. Mrs. Peggy Long's assistance made it a lot easier on me. She makes all the work that's put into drama a little more fun.

Being involved in drama has made my years at this school complete. I've learned so many things that I think it's been well worth my time."

A paper drive, sponsored by a local radio station and Oklahoma City beautiful involved most students in October and November. One senior participant said:

Understanding others purpose of new class

Discovering your real self so you can better communicate and understand others is the main purpose of human relations.

A new class in human relations was formed this year at JM, and class members seemed optimistic.

Through this class, awareness of problems including integration and the school curricular program were brought out and discussed. The class also talked about how to go about solving the problems.

With Human Relations week and other related activities, this class had an opportunity to put learning into action. Class members traveled from classroom to classroom trying to get others not enrolled in the class also involved. Seniors as well as other class members involved in the class found out more about themselves and other people around them.

Student Body Council experiences changes

The Student Body Council was one of many organizations undergoing changes this year. One senior member commented:

"As a senior in the Student Body Council, I was at first afraid that change would not come easily, but I was wrong. The feeling of change was already upon our school, and within ourselves, so that all we had to do was put this feeling into effect."

We worked to provide a chance for all John Marshall students to get involved in school life or community affairs. The opportunity for involvement was there, but the choice of utilizing it was left up to John Marshall students. Many didn't take advantage of this privilege. The effort we made in trying to involve others increased our own involvement."

As eighteen-year-olds gained the right to vote, one senior felt:

"As I approached the booth to cast my one vote in the countless millions, the thought occurred to me that I am now a part of our country's destiny, the supreme yet humble part it plays in our small world.

I could help to bring our country to greatest works through the leader of my choice, or to utter destruction through the wrong decision. Many are likely to think this is an absurd exaggeration. In a literal sense it is, but all of those who vote are faced with this decision whether the person thinks in these terms or not.

We tell others we will not make the mistakes others have in the past, but I know we will. So, I feel we have a responsibility to speak up and vote."

Religions of Mankind added to curriculum

Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaism and Christianity are all studied in the new class, Religions of Mankind. Senior Martin Conley had this to say about the subject:

"I wish that this class was a year course, so we could have gone into more depth. I really enjoyed having guest speakers give an insight into their religion. I think that it's too bad that some people came into this class expecting to learn about Baptists, Methodists, or Catholics. I hope these people realize that not everyone is a Christian."

Jobs offer workers opportunity to learn

A majority of the seniors had a part-time job, whether for the experience or extra spending money. The jobs, ranging from working in a department store to doing construction work, were all considered good training in learning responsibility. Senior Gary Ellefson replied:

"I think that every high school student should hold down a job. Jobs teach you to adjust to working, but they also give you an opportunity to do something constructive. You see the problems owners and managers have, and you learn how they go about solving them. Students shouldn't limit themselves to just one job for a long period of time, but should change jobs occasionally. This gives them the experience that a new job brings."

Decision on colleges faces many seniors

Most seniors agreed that the main thing on their mind was the selection of a college to attend. First, of course they had to make the decision as to whether or not they would attend college. Because a large percentage of the student body at JM annually attends college, many members of the senior class were involved in this decision making.

Some consultation with counselors and college representatives was necessary to determine the major field of study, tuition, the size of the college and where it is located. The PTSA sponsored College Night helped many seniors make further decisions.

Next seniors faced the questions of whether they would be able to motivate themselves in college, whether they could manage their own money and run their lives by themselves.

With the end of high school, many seniors look to careers. One student's comment was:

"I consider picking a career probably the biggest decision that person has to make in his life. When I do decide on a career, I can depend on it's being my life work. Whatever I choose, it is going to have to be something I enjoy and am interested in enough to be willing to spend the next fifty years of my life working at.

Many people will start a career that they think they are interested in, but after a while the newness wears off, and the job becomes a dull routine. This points out the importance to me, how varying the subjects that you take in college are, and what an important role they play in deciding your life's work "

Float falls in street during school parade

Many weeks, hours and minutes were put into the making of the senior Homecoming float. The theme was debated upon but the class finally came up with "Recycle the Knights." They felt this would reflect the current interest in ecology.

Between the occasional spray paint fights and eating the refreshments served, it was hard to keep students' minds on the float, but when parade time rolled around the float was ready.

Senior council makes constitutional changes

Renee Williams was an active member of the senior class council. She said:

"Although the actual final copy of the senior class council constitution took a long time to finish, I thought that the end result was well worth the effort. It was so slow in completion that many council members and sponsors were dissatisfied."

After some friction, the air was finally cleared, and the council got down to planning activities for the year.

Many new provisions were added to the new constitution. Most of them were minor changes which didn't really affect anyone, but a new list of duties was given to the Chairman of Sponsors. Among these new duties were: the right to withdraw any questions from discussion or vote by the council, and the right to veto any act of the council.

Students realize how important freedom is Recognizing the plight of prisoners of war has made the students of JM realize how important freedom is to them. They have involved themselves through developing organizations and thinking up ideas to end the war and bring the prisoners home. Senior Ken Maulsby said:

"During my senior year I have discovered that freedom is the deepest and most precious treasure anyone can possess. Many men have been imprisoned while struggling to give me my right to be free. Just as many young soldiers have staked their life on the freedom of our country, we must also give a part of ourselves by recognizing these men. We must all ask ourselves, 'Is what we are living for worth dying for?'"

One of the newest sports at JM is gymnastics. A team member had these observations:

"If you go into the gym during sixth hour, you will find many JM boys working harder than they do in any classroom. Why? Not just so they can be in better shape, not just to help their team win. They are teaching themselves what it means to be fit and do physical work.

They are acquiring new skills and improving themselves so that they can become proficient in this taxing sport. Seniors in sports, I think, realize this the most because they have been in sports the longest.

Senior boys in sports also realize how much help the Pep Clubs give. It really helps to know that these people are behind you in all that you're trying to do."

"Art is one of the best forms of expression of the mind." This is true at JM because art teachers allowed students to have freedom to express themselves in the type of art they found most enjoyable.

Spanish IV students learn from children

This year, several Spanish IV students undertook a tutoring project with four elementary children who spoke only Spanish. Martin Conley commented:

"Going to Westwood Elementary is one of the best projects the language department has ever done.

This project was a great success. Those of us who tutored learned just like the children did. It helped develop the children's English, but it also helped improve our Spanish.

At the beginning of the school year we took the children to the Oklahoma State Fair. We had a great time, but it gave us an opportunity to understand the young students better.

After tutoring the children, it really gave me a feeling of accomplishment. I will never forget the things I gained through this program."

Royalties, traditions undergo revamping

Many students ask themselves just how important royalty is in a school as big as John Marshall. One senior commented:

"Things such as Mr. and Miss Bear, Annual Belle and Beau, Pep Club Beaus, etc. all contribute to a tradition which is observed at our school each year.

Each year, I can almost pick who will be chosen as royalty the next year. It's always the same group, but if you think about it, these people, called the "social set", are involved in many school activities. Still there are those who really care about the school, but are afraid to join in because they might not be accepted. It's very important that these people be involved. Maybe then they would have a chance to win some of the honors. If the people who don't like seeing the same people getting all the honors will get involved themselves, we might see a change in our royalty system."

To Ola,
I to been really great knowing you and dating you.
I hope to date you a lot this summer who knows I might even ~~marry~~ marry you after were out of school.
I can't help falling in love with you. I think your ~~very~~ very pretty and have a good scenes of humor. So, remember I still love you and always will. After reading this you'd better give me a kiss before my heart breaks.

Have a very good summer
I'll see ya later Love

A huge Myriad Convention center was Marshall seniors were the first to use it for graduation.

Far Left: Clockwise: Junior Becky Greenwood picks up her class ring after many months of waiting; Shown in action earlier in the season, senior Bobby Glasgow was one of two Marshall wrestlers taking first at state; Ed Dowdy measures Chris Marshall's head as they both prepare to order caps and gowns; Juniors Phillippa Brown and Waylon Ables are named Outstanding Black Students in February; Students walk instead of run as the passing time between classes increased to seven minutes; Performing to unite students during Brotherhood Week are Mark Newsome, Brian Jabara and Tim Coulter.
